

Newspaper
Publishers'
Association

THE Newspaper Publishers' Association - and its allied body, the Pacific Area Newspaper Publishers' Association - is an industry group that represents newspapers in the Asia-Pacific region.

It has a membership base consisting of more than 1000 newspapers and websites across the region. This includes every significant newspaper in Australia and New Zealand, as well as most English-language newspapers in South-East Asia and the South Pacific.

We also have 90 members who are suppliers and partners of the industry. They are from both the Pacific region, North America and Europe.

A not-for-profit organisation, our association seeks to connect its members with the world's best industry practice through an exceptional program of events and information and to promote awareness and understanding of newspapers within the community.

The organisation acts as an information exchange for the newspaper industry through a regular newspaper, the PANPA Bulletin, a weekly ezine, called News Now, and a website that is updated daily. We also organise specialist workshops and seminars, covering all aspects of the newspaper industry.

The association also holds an annual conference, which attracts a cross section of industry personnel, including chief executives. In recent years, our key note speakers have included the Australian Prime Minister, Mr Kevin Rudd, the CEO of the World Association of Newspapers, Mr Timothy Balding, and the chief executive of APN news & Media, Mr Brendan Hopkins.

Founded as PANPA in 1969, members agreed to officially change the name to the Newspaper Publishers' Association in 2009. However, we retain the brand of PANPA for all our international initiatives.

Under the guidance of a board, PANPA has developed into an innovative and dynamic member association for all newspapers, their management and staff – covering areas of expertise in professional newspaper publishing such as management, marketing, advertising, editorial, technical and production.

A proactive and dynamic organisation, PANPA liaises with and is affiliated with a number of international newspapers, publishing and related industries.
